Global Retail Savings and Investments Analytics delivers a powerful view across savings and investments markets globally, enabling cross-comparison at regional and country level for 62 countries and six regions. Historical and forecast balance data are presented for four product areas, namely bonds, deposits, equities, and mutual funds.

Scope of this research

- Compare the performance of 62 retail savings and investments markets around the world.
- Discover the future outlook for each country market with our five year forecasts, segmented by asset class.
- Understand the asset class composition of each market with segmentation for deposits, equities, bonds, and mutual funds.
- Export the graphics from the dashboard, or if you are more at ease using Excel, export the data into your own worksheets.

Research and analysis highlights

There are two differing speeds in terms of future growth in the Asia Pacific retail savings and investments market. One group has internal drivers or barriers with sufficient force to prevent growth rates being depressed due to ongoing troubles in the world's developed markets, while a more mature group will suffer this slowdown.

Retail equity and retail mutual fund balances in the Americas are larger than deposit balances. This is unique to the Americas and is largely driven by the US market. Latin American markets remain heavily allocated into deposits.

The BRIC markets were among the fastest growing globally during 2006–12, with double digit growth rates and relatively limited disruption as a result of the financial crisis. The 2013–17 period will continue to see the BRICs among the fastest growing markets globally, albeit at a slower pace than during 2006–12.
